

Native American Post Doctoral Fellow Opportunity

The Native American Programs post-doctoral fellow will train at the Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (CCAN) located in the Department of Pediatrics at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center (see devbehped.s.uhsc.edu/ccan.asp). The fellow will design their post-doctoral fellowship experience with their primary supervisor by selecting from a variety of research, training, and clinical opportunities with an emphasis on program and services for American Indian and Alaska Native (AI/AN) children and their families. The CCAN has active research programs in services outcome, implementation, and dissemination, funded by federal grants (e.g., NIMH, NIAAA, Fogarty International Center, CDC, HRSA, OJJDP, and Children's Bureau), state contracts, and foundation grants. Fellows have the opportunity to join research teams on ongoing projects, access archival data, and initiate research. Information about our faculty and research programs can be found at www.icctc.org and devbehped.s.uhsc.edu/faculty.asp and devbehped.s.uhsc.edu/res.asp. Advanced clinical training experiences in available in evidence-based treatments, including the cultural adaptation Honoring Children Series (Honoring Children, Mending the Circle; Honoring Children, Making Relatives; and Honoring Children, Respectful Ways), Trauma Focused Cognitive Behavioral Therapy, Parent-Child Interaction Therapy, Treatment for Children with Sexual Behavior Problems and Adolescent Sexual Offender Treatment programs. In addition, other research opportunities include the SafeCare program with a focus on child neglect. The Native American Programs post-doctoral Fellow will have additional opportunities within Project Making Medicine, a program funded by the Indian Health Service and the Children's Bureau specifically for the clinical training in treatment of child physical and sexual abuse in Indian Country. Fellows will participate in a two-semester Interdisciplinary Training Program in Child Abuse and Neglect (ITP) for advanced students in psychology, medicine, dentistry, occupational therapy/physical therapy, law, social work, education, public health, nursing, sociology, and related disciplines (see devbehped.s.uhsc.edu/itp.asp). Established in 1987, the ITP provides specialized training in clinical practice, prevention, policy formation, child advocacy, research, and administration in the field of child abuse and neglect.
